

Student Rights and Responsibilities

The program of instruction and its attending facilities, equipment, supplies, and professional staff are all provided for the betterment of the students in terms of their intellectual, emotional, social, and physical growth. In order to fully promote this goal, the school staff should inform the students of their rights and responsibilities and should also model them as a way to advance student acceptance, respect, and use.

Basically, student rights include:

- The right to know the school's rules and regulations and the consequence for violating them.
- The right to opinions and opportunities to share them with staff and students in ways that compliment the school programs.
- The right to be treated with respect by staff and students.
- The right to be heard in cases of disciplinary actions.
- The right of equal opportunities.

Students also have certain responsibilities while attending school, which include:

- The responsibility to know, respect, and abide by school rules and regulations.
- The responsibility to respect the opinion of others.
- The responsibility to treat others with dignity.
- The responsibility to apply the best effort possible in all learning situations.

Adopted: October 28, 1998

Reviewed: January 30, 2007

Revised: